Select Menu > Applications > Internet radio.

Nokia Internet Radio is a network service. Before you can connect to the Nokia Internet Radio service to listen to radio stations, you must have a wireless LAN or packet data access point defined in your device. WLAN is the recommended connection method.

Using packet data access points may involve transmission of large amounts of data through your service provider's network. Contact your service provider for information about data transmission charges.

Internet radio settings

IR_HELP_SETTINGS

To change internet radio connection settings, select Menu > Applications > Internet radio > Options > Settings.

To select the default access point to connect to the network, select Default access point and the access point. Select Always ask if you want the device to ask for the access point every time you open the application.

Using packet data access points may involve transmission of large amounts of data through your service provider's network. Contact your service provider for information about data transmission charges.

To change the connection speeds for different connection types, select from the following:

- GPRS connection bitrate—for GPRS packet data connections
- 3G connection bitrate—for UMTS packet data connections
- Wi-Fi connection bitrate—for wireless LAN connections

The quality of the radio broadcast depends on the selected connection speed. The higher the speed, the better the quality. However, selecting the highest connection speed (bit rate more than 128 kbps) for GPRS packet data connections may cause frequent buffering and diminish reception quality.

The available settings may vary.
